ian watson s latest collection shows the same range and apparently inexhaustible fund of ideas that have characterized all his previous books no other contemporary figure in sf is so prolific or inventive a writer of short stories in the title story we immediately encounter a phantasmagoric vision of a society increasingly dependent on recycling its usable material other brilliant inventions include a planet inhabited by lemur like aliens who bafflingly produce marvellously finished stone carvings without apparently having the tools to do so the moon and michelangelo people fighting their way through the various levels of what appears to be a real life version of a computer adventure game jewels in an angel s wing and a zoo in which are caged the extensions into our universe of four dimensional hyberbeings hyperzoo and that is only the beginning there are fifteen stories in all each one a state of the art example of short science fiction at its finest in the context of widespread precarity and ongoing crises ruins have captured much attention in recent years this book is about a troubling new kind of space for consumer society the retail ruin drawing on the author s own fieldnotes and photographs this book takes a hauntological approach to these new ruins in the urban landscape a collage of adventure futuristic fiction fascinating and unforgettable characters the contributions in this volume which is part of a series examine the connection between literature and ideas in important 19th century instances the editor contends that they demonstrate that russian literature often subverts the ideology to suit its own autonomous needs
